FIRST REPORT

OF

THE COMMISSIONERS OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION,

IRELAND.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY,

WE the Commissioners appointed under Your Majesty's Commission, bearing date the 15th day of August, in the fifth year of Your Majesty's reign, whose names are hereunto subscribed, beg leave humbly to certify that, in obedience to the directions of the said Commission, we have proceeded diligently in the investigation of the several matters therein set forth: and whereas our Inquiries necessarily embraced a wide field, and included many important circumstances which it was difficult to ascertain; and whereas we feel that the reliance to be placed on the accuracy of our statements must depend in a great measure on the fitness of the means which we employed in the prosecution of such Inquiries; we therefore deem it essential, in the first instance, to state fully and in detail the course we have pursued for the purpose of adequately fulfilling the duties which the Commission imposed on us.

With a view to carry into effect the instructions by which we were authorized and appointed to visit every parish in Ireland, and to ascertain on the spot the several matters mentioned in the Commission, we considered it advisable that we should obtain from each parish such preliminary information connected with the subjects of our Inquiry, as might facilitate the prosecution of the local investigations.

With this view we prepared lists of queries embracing the several objects of our Inquiry, (excepting the census of the population, as to which a different course was adopted,) and transmitted copies of those lists, with explanatory circular letters, to the ministers of religion of all persuasions officiating in the respective parishes of Ireland, so far as we were enabled to ascertain their names, and the parishes to which they severally belonged. In addressing these queries to the officiating clergy we were influenced by the consideration that the several parochial matters upon which information was sought lay within their peculiar cognizance, and consequently that such information could, in most cases, be furnished by them at a comparatively small sacrifice of their time and trouble.

In order, however, to provide against cases of omission on the part of any of the clergy to supply the required information with regard to their respective parishes, we also transmitted similar lists of queries to the several enumerators employed by us, in that branch of our Inquiry which related to the census of the population.

To these queries we have been furnished by the clergy of the Established Church with answers relating to 1,390 parishes; by the Roman Catholic clergy with answers relating to 868 parishes; by Presbyterian ministers with answers relating to 210 parishes; and by the enumerators with answers relating to all the parishes in Ireland.

For the purpose of obtaining a census, by parishes, of the present numbers of the inhabitants of Ireland, distinguishing their respective religious tenets, the following was the method which, after much and attentive consideration, we adopted:

After duly considering the great expense, the prospect of delay, and other inconveniences incidental to an entirely new enumeration (involving a classification into religious denominations) of the population of Ireland, we determined upon making the population returns for 1831 the basis of our operations with regard to this branch of our Inquiry, by referring them back to the original enumerators, in order that they might distinguish the religious persuasion of the several persons therein mentioned.

The last general census of the population of Ireland, was taken in the year 1831, by 1,308 enumerators, appointed for that purpose by the magistrates of the several counties, under the provisions of the Population Acts then in force.

That census was taken by districts, comprising one or more parishes, or parts of parishes, according to the civil division prevailing in counties for the purpose of grand jury assessments; and each enumerator employed upon it was bound to visit personally, and to verify on his oath the fact of his having so visited, every house within the parishes, or parts of parishes, which he had been appointed to enumerate.

In the original books used by these enumerators are specified, among other particulars, the several townlands or streets in each of such parishes; the several houses in each of such townlands or streets; the name of the owner or occupier of each house; the number of families residing in each house; the number of persons in each family, distinguishing males and females; and the number of servants in each house, distinguishing males and females.

We may here notice two important advantages which attended this use of the census of 1831, as the basis of our Inquiry in respect to population. In the first place, it furnished a fixed total number of persons in each parish, townland, and house, ascertained by simple enumeration, and free from the suspicion of being intentionally returned greater or less than the truth, owing to any bias that might be supposed to exist in the mind of the enumerator, since, at the time that census was taken, there was no expectation that it would be used for the purpose of discovering the proportion which the members of each religious persuasion bore to each other. In the next place, the enumerators, by whom that census was taken, were appointed in 1831 by the magistrates in each county, and were better qualified by their local knowledge and acquaintance with their own entries in the census books, to insert the religious denominations with accuracy and expedition, than persons less conversant with the subject; and, by so employing them, we were also enabled to avoid the many delays and other inconveniences which would have arisen, had we undertaken to select for ourselves an entirely new body of enumerators for the whole of Ireland. This return was also of use in checking any private census that might be presented to the Commissioner, inasmuch as it enabled him to estimate the probable accuracy of any return taken at the present time, by comparing it with the classified census of 1831.

We accordingly caused copies of these books to be transmitted to the original enumerators employed in the year 1831, (except in some few instances, where others were of necessity substituted,) together with directions to them to ascertain and insert, in columns left blank for that purpose, the particular religious persuasions of the inhabitants of each parish according to its population, as it appeared from such original return to have existed in the year 1831. Among the other instructions given to the enumerators, we impressed upon them the importance of their communicating with each minister of religion (of whatever persuasion) residing or officiating within the parish, and of soliciting from him such information as he might be able to supply with regard to any cases upon which his assistance might be required; and we further instructed the enumerators to afford to such of the clergy of the parish as might at any time desire to inspect the return of 1831, every reasonable facility for so doing. At the same time that we transmitted the books and the accompanying instructions to the enumerators, we addressed a circular letter to the respective resident and officiating clergy of each parish, apprizing them of the course that we were adopting in relation to this branch of our Inquiry, and requesting their aid so far as they could conveniently afford it. The general outline of the course subsequently pursued, will sufficiently appear in an extract from the circular letter last referred to, which, after specifying the nature of the additional matter to be inserted by the enumerator in his original return, proceeds as follows:

"It is intended that the return relating to each of the parishes over which your ministry extends, when completed by the insertion of such additional matter, shall be deposited in some convenient place in or near to the parish, (of which you shall receive due notice,) to be there open, for at the least fourteen days, to the inspection of yourself and other persons residing in or connected with the parish; and, it is further intended, that upon a future day, (of which also you shall receive due notice,) some of the Commissioners shall repair to the district, for the purpose (among other things) of having the said return verified by the oath of the enumerator employed to amend it; upon which occasion the Commissioners so attending will be ready to receive any evidence that you may desire to give, either personally or through others, with respect to the correctness of such return, and also to receive any original census (verified by affidavit) of the present numbers of the inhabitants of the parish, belonging to each or any of the respective religious persuasions therein, that you may be pleased to tender them in aid of their Inquiry." The clergy to whom this circular was addressed were further informed by it of the instructions given to the enumerators to afford them (should they so desire) every facility of inspecting the return transmitted to each enumerator, during the period that he might be occupied in classifying it.

With the exception of some few instances, where a partial deviation from this plan was found to be expedient or indispensable, the course of proceeding as above detailed has been uniformly acted upon.

As, from time to time, on the completion of the enumerators' books, and the expiration of the fourteen days from the day of their deposit for public inspection, each benefice became ready to be visited, one or more of the Commissioners, furnished with all the returns which had been received with regard to such benefice, repaired to the spot, and held an Inquiry in respect thereof, into the several matters directed by the Commission. In all cases the Commissioners, besides directing previous public notice to be given of the time and place of holding the Inquiry, sent a special notice thereof to the several clergy of the parish, to the enumerator, to the schoolmasters, and others whose personal attendance was requisite. The Commissioners held their local investigation publicly; causing the population return, as classified by the enumerator, to be verified by his oath, and receiving any evidence that might be tendered on the spot with respect to its accuracy; receiving and examining into the correctness of any original census of the actual inhabitants of the parish (distinguishing their religious creeds) which might be offered to them, and ascertaining on the evidence of the parties attending before them, the several other matters of fact (exclusive of the census) comprised within the terms of the Commission. Although, from our Inquiries being in every case held on the spot, the Commissioner was usually unable to give the parties concerned more than a few days' notice of his visit, yet we are happy to state that our Inquiries were almost invariably attended by the clergy of the Established Church, and very generally, especially in country parishes, by the clergy of other denominations; and that we found, almost universally, a disposition prevailing in all quarters to aid our investigations, and to furnish us with the information which it was our duty to obtain.

The result of the local investigation in each separate benefice is recorded in the special report thereupon of the visiting Commissioners; the Report distinguishing the matters directed by the Commission to be inquired into, according to the division of benefices and of parishes respectively.

In reference to the subject of benefices and parishes, we have here to observe that we have understood the benefice contemplated by the Commission to mean the "parochial benefice," or the territorial extent comprised within each particular "cure of souls;" and it consequently appeared to us that the one or more parishes forming such benefice should be taken to be parishes according to the present ecclesiastical division of the Established Church of Ireland. That division we have accordingly adopted throughout our Inquiry.

But the ecclesiastical division of parishes is often not identical, either in name or territorial extent, with the civil division of parishes already mentioned as existing in counties for the purposes of grand jury assessments, and adopted in the population returns of 1821 and 1831. We thus found in many instances (independently of a difference in name) that one ecclesiastical parish was composed of two or more civil parishes, or parts of parishes; and more frequently, on the other hand, that two or more ecclesiastical parishes, or parts of parishes, were comprised in a single civil parish. It may further be remarked that, in the Roman Catholic Church, a parochial division is adopted totally distinct from the ecclesiastical or civil.

For the purpose, therefore, of avoiding confusion, and of enabling the visiting Commissioner to ascertain each particular ecclesiastical parish upon which he had to report, we applied to the registrars of the several dioceses in Ireland, and, with two exceptions, we obtained from all of them returns, specifying, among other things, the names of the several parochial benefices within the diocese; of the parishes forming each benefice; and of the townlands over which each of such parishes extends.

By a comparison of these with the names of the townlands in the population returns of 1831, aided by oral evidence received on the spot, the visiting Commissioners were enabled to ascertain in every case the name and territorial boundaries of each parish, according to the ecclesiastical division, and to assign to each its proper population; and in those cases where he was without the aid of the registrar's return, he was able to obtain the requisite information as to townlands from the tithe composition book deposited in the parish, or from oral evidence.

With respect to the several statistical matters (apart from the census) embraced within the scope of the Inquiry, the Commissioners, with the aid of the documentary information previously supplied to them, and of the evidence resorted to on the spot, have succeeded in obtaining satisfactory results; and accordingly they do not feel it to be necessary to state, with more minuteness than has been already done, the particular mode of investigation adopted by them for that purpose.

With regard, however, to the census,—a subject of inquiry upon which, from its own nature, rigid accuracy is not easily insured, even where nothing beyond a simple enumeration is involved,—we will now submit a few details explanatory of the process through which the results in the present instance have been obtained.

As a general rule, (subject, however, to exceptions hereafter mentioned,) the enumerator's return for 1831 has been acted upon as conclusive evidence of the total number in that year of the inhabitants of each parish; but with respect to the enumerator's classification of those inhabitants into the several religious denominations, the Commissioner holding the Inquiry received and invited all such evidence from the parties attending before him as might enable him to correct any errors committed by the enumerator. Having accordingly corrected any errors that might be pointed out, the Commissioner received the return, thus classified, as a census of the population of the parish in the year 1831, founded, so far as numbers were concerned, upon actual enumeration; and if no satisfactory original census of the present population of the parish, similarly classified, was tendered to him, he proceeded to supply its place through the following process of computation:

Before the visiting Commissioners had proceeded to make their local Inquiries, we obtained, by a comparison of the detailed returns of the population of Ireland contained in the abstracts of the censuses of 1821 and 1831, printed by order of the House of Commons, the ratio of increase or diminution of the population that was found upon such comparison to have actually prevailed between those years,—first, in the rural districts of each particular county, and next in all towns therein having a population of not less than 2,000 inhabitants; and proceeding upon the assumption that the ratio so ascertained had continued undisturbed up to the year 1834, we caused Tables to be framed showing the proportionate increase or diminution of the population of such rural districts and towns respectively, which, according to that assumption, might be estimated to have taken place between the years 1831 and 1834. By a reference to these Tables, the Commissioner was enabled at once to determine the extent to which he was to add to, or deduct from, the numbers of the population of any particular parish as given in the census of 1831.

And, upon the further assumption that the variations as to increase or diminution had been equal among the several religious denominations, the same rate of computation applied to each of those denominations gave their present numbers, bearing the same relative proportions with respect to religious tenets as in the classified census of 1831. But as the rate used in each computation was liable to have been disturbed within the three preceding years by local and temporary causes, such as unusual mortality, or unusual emigration from or immigration into the parish, the Commissioners, before adopting the computed numbers as a final result, ascertained by evidence whether or not such causes had existed, and, where their existence was established, made the necessary allowances for them, according to the extent to which they appeared to have operated.

In some instances it was discovered that, in the enumeration of 1831, a particular townland in a parish had been accidentally omitted. In these cases an original census of such townland, embracing the distinctions of religion, was taken, under the direction of the Commissioners, and the numbers, as found by such census, added to the computed population of the present time.

In other instances it was found that a particular townland had been twice enumerated in 1831, and assigned to two distinct parishes. In such cases the visiting Commissioner ascertained by evidence the parish to which it properly belonged, and deducted the number of its inhabitants from the population of the parish to which it had been erroneously assigned.

The census of 1831 having been taken on the principle of inserting as inmates of each house visitors residing therein for two or more days, and, in the case of inns or hotels, travellers residing therein for one or more nights, it became necessary to ascertain whether that census of the parish under investigation might not have included some considerable number of merely temporary residents, such as harvest labourers or casual visitors; and, when such was found to have been the fact, and the probable number of such temporary residents established by evidence, they were deducted from the number of the population as existing at the present time that would otherwise have resulted from the computation made. In such cases also, whenever the parish in which any of the individuals so deducted were permanently domiciled was discoverable, care was taken that they should be added to the population of their proper parish. With these and similar precautions, the visiting Commissioners, in the absence of an original census, arrived at a computation of the present numbers of the inhabitants of each particular parish, distinguishing their respective religious creeds.

In numerous instances, however, the officiating clergy of the parish, and more especially of the Established Church, in accordance with the suggestion contained in the circular letter from which an extract has been above given, tendered at the place of holding the local Inquiry an original census taken by them or under their direction, comprising either the whole or a portion of the present population of the parish, distinguishing the religious persuasions to which the individuals therein set down respectively belonged.

Every such census was open to the inspection of all persons present at the Inquiry, and its accuracy was scrutinized by the visiting Commissioner, who received all proper evidence in support or impeachment of its correctness; and whenever the accuracy of such original census was established to the satisfaction of the Commissioner, it was adopted in preference to the computation based upon the census of 1831.

It is observable that the census of the members of the Established Church includes a considerable number of Wesleyan Methodists who, although attending religious service in other places of worship, consider themselves to be in connexion with the Established Church, and wished to be classed as members of that body. We do not report the particular number of these persons, but that it is considerable, especially in some districts, will appear from an inspection of the number of their places of worship enumerated in our reports, and the average number of persons attending Divine Service in each.

We were not required by the terms of the Commission to distinguish the denominations and numerical proportions of those other Protestants who really dissent from the Established Church, and who desired to be classed as Protestant Dissenters; and it is only by a reference to the names of the places of worship, and the statement of their average congregations, that the names of these religious denominations and their respective numerical importance can be collected from our reports.

In the special report of the visiting Commissioner upon each parish, or union of parishes, will be found a Table, showing the numbers of the inhabitants according to the census of 1831, classified into their several denominations, and a second Table showing the numbers in 1834, (similarly classified,) as resulting from the local Inquiry, and specifying, in a note annexed thereto, whether the latter result had been obtained by a computation from the census of 1831, or from an original census furnished to the reporting Commissioner.

We have here to observe, that with respect to any given parish, (even where its ecclesiastical and civil name is the same,) the numbers of its population, in the year 1831, as stated in the first of these Tables, will be found not to accord with the numbers for the same nominal parish appearing in the population returns for 1831, excepting in those cases where the territorial extent of the ecclesiastical and civil parish happen to be identical.

With respect to the enumeration of the population of Ireland made in 1831, which has served as the basis of our Inquiry, we have had every reason to be satisfied of its general correctness; and, on the whole, we present to Your Majesty our census of Ireland for the past year with a full confidence that it affords a very close approximation to the truth in a matter where perfect accuracy is nearly unattainable. If, however, there is any part of our census which exhibits the true state of the population more precisely than another, it is that which relates to the members of the Established Church; as not only the comparative smallness of their numbers in some parts of the country, and their social position, render them more easy of enumeration, but in a large number of parishes we have been enabled to return the Protestants of the Established Church on the authority of censuses made for the occasion by their own clergymen, and carefully investigated at the local Inquiry held by the visiting Commissioners.

We have, however, in very few instances been enabled to state the number of Presbyterians, from an original census of their own minister. This did not arise from any unwillingness on the part of the Presbyterian clergymen to assist our Inquiries, but from the circumstance of their cure of souls being independent of territorial divisions. As the Presbyterians resident in any given parish, frequently belonged to congregations of different ministers, it was impossible for us to state their numbers by original census, unless all those ministers attended at the Inquiry, and tendered a census of such members of their respective congregations as dwelt in the parish. Hence it happened that we were prevented from making use of the census of a Presbyterian minister containing his own congregation, in most of the cases in which it was offered to us.

The statement which we have above made with respect to the accuracy of the censuses contained in our reports applies especially to the rural districts, and all the less considerable towns. But in the large towns, we have been forced to be contented with a less scrupulous accuracy, on account of the extreme difficulty of ascertaining, except at an enormous expense, the true number of the inhabitants, and the religious persuasion of each person, in places where there is a large and fluctuating poor population, who are lodged in houses where each room is often a separate tenement, and who are frequently unknown to their neighbours, or even to their fellow-lodgers. With regard to Belfast, Waterford, Limerick, and Cork, we have obtained returns of which the errors probably lie within a small compass; with regard to Dublin, however, where the difficulties which we have just intimated were far greater than in the other large towns, the results which we have obtained are not such that any reliance can be placed on their minute accuracy. In some Dublin parishes (as those of St. Paul and St. Anne) the enumerator performed his task in such a manner that the error in the result may be considerable; in others, the population was ascertained with as much correctness as was possible, by means of a census made three years before, in a city where there is a constantly fluctuating population; and in a few, the numbers were ascertained with a close approximation to the truth, by an original census made for the occasion under the inspection of the respective clergymen. In many of the Dublin parishes, likewise, the Commissioner was assisted by a comparison of a census of the Protestants made by the clergymen of the Established Church in the year 1832. By these means we have succeeded in giving such an account of the population of the Dublin parishes as is not, in our opinion, very wide of the truth; and which, in some parishes, approaches it as closely as the circumstances of the case admit; but we should not feel justified in claiming for it the same amount of credit to which we consider our numerical statements for the rest of Ireland as properly entitled.

The special reports of the visiting Commissioners upon all the several benefices and parishes in every diocese of Ireland are now completed, and consist of two parts; the first of which, hereunto annexed, we beg leave to submit to Your Majesty.

In this First Part, all matters relating to population and to religious institutions are presented under a form of arrangement which brings the whole, as appertaining to each parish or union of parishes, at once into view.

The benefices are, as far as possible, arranged under the classes to which they were severally represented to belong. In Class I. are ordinary Rectories and Vicarages; in Class II. Perpetual Cures; and in Class III. such Impropriate Cures as are held separately from any other benefice. It is to be observed, with respect to this last class, that, in some of them, although commonly denominated "impropriate cures," it is out of appropriate funds that provision is made for the payment of the curate.

A separate class (Class IV.) has likewise been formed of parishes or other districts, in which no provision for the cure of souls appeared to exist.

In the Second Part, which we shall shortly present to Your Majesty, will be contained the results of our Inquiry respecting Schools in each benefice, arranged in the same successive order as in the First Part.

It appears that the population of Ireland, as deducible from the census which we now offer, consists of 852,064 of the Established Church, 6,427,712 Roman Catholics, 642,356 Presbyterians, and 21,808 other Protestant Dissenters; making, in the whole, 7,943,940 persons. But it is observable that in proceeding upon the census of 1831, the religion of 18,951 persons included therein could not be now ascertained, on account of changes of residence which had taken place since that year, and the difficulty of discovering their actual domicile. Of the persons so omitted a considerable portion were doubtless supplied by means of original censuses; leaving, however, a residue which ought not to be altogether overlooked in estimating the total population of Ireland for 1834.

From the same census it also appears, that the proportion, per centum, borne by the several religious denominations in Ireland to the total population, is as follows:—The members of the Established Church, $10\frac{726}{1000}$; the Roman Catholics, $80\frac{918}{1000}$; the Presbyterians, $8\frac{86}{1000}$; and the other Protestant Dissenters, $\frac{275}{1000}$. And in reference to the proportions of the several religious persuasions, it is further observable that, whilst it does not appear to us that there is any unusual inequality in the distribution of the general population, it will be seen, upon a review of our reports, that the members of the Established Church are very unequally dispersed over the country. It will accordingly be found that there are some benefices (more particularly in the southern and western parts of Ireland) in which there are no members of the Established Church; that there are others in which there are but a few; whilst, in others, more especially in the large towns, their number is considerable. The Roman Catholics are generally diffused over all parts of the country, but exhibit the largest numbers, as compared with the rest of the population, in the provinces of Dublin, Cashel, and Tuam. The Presbyterians reside chiefly in the province of Armagh; whilst the other Protestant Dissenters do not prevail in any peculiar district, but are for the most part inhabitants of towns.

It is also observable that in some instances, from the great extent of the benefice, the members of the Established Church are widely scattered amongst the other inhabitants, whilst—owing to the lengthened form, or other local peculiarities of other benefices—they are at an inconvenient distance from the place of worship, or from the residence of the clergy assigned to them. The same inconvenience also occasionally arises from the fact that the parishes in union are not contiguous to each other, and that the intermediate distance is in some cases very considerable. Hence it happens that sometimes the parishioners resort to other places of worship which are more conveniently situated for them, and that frequently the labours of the minister in the strict performance of his parochial duties must be unduly increased.

Having thus submitted to Your Majesty a statement of the principles on which we have conducted our Inquiry, and adverted to a few of the general circumstances that may not be distinctly apparent in our special reports, we shall abstain from enlarging upon the various important results deducible from the detail of the circumstances into which we have inquired. In adopting this course we are influenced by the consideration, that inasmuch as the Inquiry committed to our charge is essentially of a statistical nature, and as we are not authorized to recommend remedial measures in respect to the anomalous relation in which the institutions of the Established Church stand, with reference both to its own members, and to the rest of the population in the greater part of Ireland, as apparent from those facts as set forth in our reports, any comments upon those facts illustrative of that relation, would necessarily involve us in the lengthened discussion of many matters of serious import not comprehended, as we conceive, within the scope of our Inquiry.

We feel, however, that the condensed results of some of the leading heads of our Inquiry may conduce to the clear understanding of the whole. We have, therefore, formed the following Summaries for each diocese and province, and, finally, for the whole of Ireland; which, amongst other particulars, exhibit at one view the state of the population in respect to the different religious persuasions, and the proportion of each to the whole; the number of parishes, and of places of worship; the state of the benefices in reference to unions; the contiguity of the united parishes; the places of worship; the residence of incumbents; the existence of glebe houses; the total population of each benefice, and the number of members of the Established Church belonging to each benefice. The last of these heads, by classifying the benefices according as the members of the Established Church in each are above or below successive numbers in a scale ascending from 0 to above 5,000, will bring clearly into view the degree in which, as has been already noticed, their unequal distribution prevails throughout the several dioceses in Ireland.

It may be necessary to remark here, in explanation of the preceding Summaries, that we have included cathedrals, parish churches, and chapels of ease, under the head of "Churches;" whilst, under that of "other Places of Worship of the Established Church," we have included those places in which Divine Service is performed by a minister of the Established Church; it being not an unusual custom to make use of a school-house or other suitable place which may be conveniently situated for that purpose, in those benefices where there is either no church, or where the church is situated at an inconvenient distance from a part of the parishioners. Private places of worship, and those situated in jails, or other establishments which are not open to the public, though generally noticed in the Reports, have not been counted in the Summary; but all other places of worship of the Established Church which are open to the public, have been included under one or other of the above-mentioned heads, according to their particular nature. In respect to the residence of incumbents, it is observable that we have taken this to mean residence strictly within the limits of the benefice; although the use of the term in that strict sense necessarily excludes, as non-residents, those incumbents who, from want of accommodation, or other such cause, reside in an adjoining benefice. It sometimes happens, too, that incumbents so residing are more conveniently situated for the discharge of their parochial duties, than others who are, strictly speaking, resident within the benefice. But it became necessary to fix some certain rule, and if not determined by the lineal boundary of the benefice, each case would have involved a question of degree, as to whether the distance was such as would admit of the incumbent being considered as virtually resident or not.

In the Appendix annexed to our Reports will be found returns made to us by the registrars of the several dioceses in Ireland, which will exhibit the state of each diocese in respect to the number of beneficed clergy and curates; the number of benefices with, and the number without cure of souls; and the number of instances in which an incumbent holds more than one benefice.

We have also appended similar returns, made at our request, by the several bishops of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, showing the names and number of parish priests, curates, and places of worship in the several dioceses, according to the divisions adopted in that Church.

We have in conclusion to remark, that we shall reserve any reference to the results of our Inquiry respecting the Schools and State of Education now existing in Ireland, until we present the Second Part of our Reports to Your Majesty.

We the Commissioners of Public Instruction, Ireland, whose names are hereunto subscribed, humbly submit to Your Majesty this our First Report:

N.B.—The Protestant population in this parish for 1834, if compared with that given by the enumerator for 1831, shows a very large diminution. The enumerator's return cannot be depended on; as there can be no doubt, from the evidence that was produced before the commissioners, who visited the parish, that the return is very greatly exaggerated. The extent, however, of the exaggeration, owing to the time that has elapsed since the census of 1831 was taken, could not be accurately ascertained.

[a] Very little reliance can be placed on the numbers of the several religious persuasions as stated by the enumerator. A census of the Protestants was taken in 1832, by the curates, which gave 3,084, including about 60 Protestant Dissenters; in this census occasional lodgers and inmates of hotels were not included. It was stated by one of the curates, that in his opinion the Protestant population of St. Ann's amounted, at the beginning of 1835, to about 3,300 persons, of whom very few were Protestant Dissenters. The Roman Catholic population is considerably underrated in the enumerator's account. If the number of Protestants stated by the curate is deducted from the total population for 1831, there would remain 5,063 for the Roman Catholics.
[b] By original census of the curates.
[c] Increase negatived by evidence.

There are three other Chapels belonging to the regulars, over which the secular clergy have no control, viz., the Abbey, or Franciscan Chapel; the Augustinian; and the Dominican, or West Convent. The secular, or parochial clergy, indispensably require two or three additional Chapels, when they can obtain means to erect them.
Rev. J. Kirwan	Two Curates at present; a third lately died, whose place has not yet been filled. Those living, are the Rev. Mr. Thew and the Rev. Mr. Acton.	There is but one Chapel in the village of Outerarde, in a district of about 25 miles long. Two more are indispensably requisite.
